A small collection of digitized documents (papers, periodicals, memos, photos, audio recordings) are stored on the Department's internal network. Topics include but are not limited to: Volunteer Awards, Staff and Client photos, Camp Laurie, the history of blindness nationally and in Iowa, and conference brochures.

Scope and Content Note

Special Note: The Iowa Department for the Blind (IDB) was originally named the Iowa Commission for the Blind, and achieved departmental status in 1988. Consequently, the name Iowa Commission for the Blind will be used when referring to documents prior to 1988 and the name Department for the Blind will be used when referring to agency materials dated after 1988. The three-member board that provides policy oversight retains the name Iowa Commission for the Blind.

The Iowa Department for the Blind's Iowa Blind History archive contains various materials dating from 1915 to the present (2011). The majority of the information, however, dates 1960s-1990s. These materials consist primarily of photographs, periodicals, publications containing blindness-related articles, office papers and personal correspondence. Many undated materials are found throughout.

The information included in the collection relates to the institutional history of the Iowa Department for the Blind. Materials also include, but not limited to, the history of the National Federation of the Blind (NFB); controversy surrounding Kenneth Jernigan, the NFB and IDB; and the Iowa Braille and Sight Saving School.

The collection includes documents in American Braille and New York Point. These documents consist of poems, novels, and music.

The majority of the information contained within this collection is open to the general public upon request. Some documents, however, are confidential and are marked accordingly.

Biographical/Historical Sketch

As this archive will explain, the philosophies and rehabilitation methods related to blindness have varied, in Iowa and the nation. The majority of the information found within this archive relates directly to the institutional history of the Iowa Department for the Blind. However, the Iowa Braille and Sight Saving School will be mentioned briefly, as it has a significant role in the history of blindness in Iowa.

The Iowa Braille and Sight Saving School was founded as the Asylum for the Blind in 1852. The school is still in operation, to date, and is Iowa's second oldest educational institution. The school was established as a residential program, where blind students lived and attended academic classes. Students also learned potential vocational skills, including rug weaving chair caning, and beadwork. (In the latter half of the twentieth century, vocational training at the school was phased out.)

Between the years of 1959 and 1965, Kenneth Jernigan, the director of the Iowa Commission for the Blind, sought to move administrative control of the school from the State Board of Regents to the Commission. This attempt was met with resistance from several arenas. An important point of dispute centered on the different educational approaches of blind individuals espoused by the Commission and the School. Ultimately, the Board of Regents retained administrative oversight. Newspaper articles and other publications on this controversy are included in this collection.

Established in 1925 as the Iowa Commission for the Blind, the agency was originally housed in three rooms of the old Amos Hiatt Building at East 12th and Court. In its early years, the agency's small staff of less than 10 provided limited employment services. Its vocational approach for blind Iowans, as was the case throughout the nation, focused on trades training areas such as weaving, broom making, chair caning, needle work, and beadwork. As was its mandate, the Commission's primary activities between the years of 1925 to the late 1950s focused on training blind Iowans in the production a variety of handcraft items, the loaning and leasing of tools and equipment needed to produce the handcrafted items, and the marketing and selling of those items through its Home Industries program.

Those individuals who attempted to find employment in other areas received little support from the agency. In a limited capacity, the Commission supported those seeking employment outside of the traditional trades occupations by providing small loans to blind Iowans who were attending college. Because talking books and books in Braille were limited, the agency did not work to provide these materials to blind Iowans.

In 1957, only twelve blind Iowans were placed in employment. Most of these were in sub-standard employment and required additional support either from public funds or from families. According to the Commission's 1960 Annual Report, a survey conducted by the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation in 1957 indicated that there were over 800 blind people in Iowa who were capable of employment, but were doing nothing. Individuals participating in the blind vendors program were earning an average of $105 a month. The agency had a list of 4,000 blind Iowans, many of whom were in need of services. A staff of five professionals and three clerical personnel and a limited budget were to meet these needs.

Starting in the 1950s, the Commission changed its focus from providing trades training and selling goods made by blind Iowans to assisting blind Iowans in finding competitive employment in a variety of jobs. This change came about because of new federal Vocational Rehabilitation laws and because of new agency leadership. Mrs. Ethel Holmes had been the director of the agency from its inception until her retirement in 1957. In 1958, Kenneth Jernigan was hired as its director. The program Jernigan created in Iowa was based upon a "positive" philosophy of blindness and came to serve as a model that changed rehabilitation programs and services for the blind across the nation and around the world.

Kenneth Jernigan was a member and leader in the National Federation of the Blind (NFB). He came to Iowa specifically to test whether the NFB's philosophical approach to training blind individuals was valid. The "Iowa Experiment" or "Iowa Model" was based on the belief that blindness is a simply characteristic and, if properly taught alternative techniques, the blind could do many of the same tasks as those with sight. This approach was "consumer based," one where the blind individual's choices and decisions were given priority. The model focused on teaching alternative skills (Braille, cane travel, etc.) in such a way that no vision was required, by using sleep shades. The programs were designed to push blind Iowans to question their assumptions about their own capabilities, confront society's stereotypical attitude toward blindness, and encourage self confidence. This new philosophical approach would be implemented in classes taught to adults in the Adult Orientation and Adjustment Center, which officially opened in 1959 with three students and two teachers.

The Iowa Department for the Blind's six-story building was built in 1911-1912 as a YMCA, and it remained such until 1959. After much negotiation, the Commission occupied the YMCA building on February 1, 1960. Documents related to the negotiations and purchase of the building are included in this collection. Not long after, the Orientation Center was up and running, along with the newly established Iowa Library for the Blind. By 1966, the transformation that had taken place in Iowa was often referred to as a "miracle" and the Iowa program was recognized as being "one of the best, if not the finest, in the world" by Donald Overbeay, one of the nation's leading educators of the blind.<sup>1</sup>

Within less than a decade Jernigan was able to transform what was recognized as the worst rehabilitation program for the blind in the United States into what was widely hailed as the best and served as a model for other rehabilitation programs across the nation and around the world. It remains a prevailing model for rehabilitation programs for the blind in the United States with the Iowa Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped having the largest Braille collection in the nation, to date.

The Department's building has been listed on the National Register of Historic places for the revolutionary work Dr. Jernigan conducted while Director. More information about Dr. Jernigan in this regard can be found in the National Register of Historic Places nominating documents located at the Department.

Archive Box 4:

This box contains materials related to the Iowa Department for the Blind’s building history, services provided by IDB, various papers and speeches related to IDB and NFB, and controversy surrounding Kenneth Jernigan. Dates include 1950s-1990s, and undated.

Folder 1: Designating Space for Commission (pre-YMCA)

Prior to purchasing the old YMCA building, the Iowa Commission for the Blind spent time searching for their own designated space, rather than sharing an office building under an umbrella agency. This folder contains letters and documents that discuss the search for space specifically for the Iowa Commission’s use.

Folder 2: Obtaining/Purchasing Building for Commission *Water Damage*

This folder contains information on the campaign to obtain and purchase the old YMCA building for the Iowa Commission for the Blind. The general argument was that the Commission’s purpose was so particular; they didn’t ‘fit’ under any other organization. The Commission needed its own space in order to properly succeed in its mission. The documents within the two folders range from: periodicals, correspondence, memorandums, and other documents. A few of the items are listed below. Dates range from 1959-1960.

Letter and newspaper publicity on purchasing the building and plans for new Center.
